happened over in the west side awhile There is a row of houses on a street up there that are rather close together. One day a man who lives long in the middle of the row thought that he would have his house painted and he straightway went down town and hired the painters to do the job. His roof was one of the fancy shingle affairs and he wanted it painted red. When the time came to paint the roof the three men who were working on the job fixed a ladder upon it and took places on it. one at the peak, one 640p.m. in the middle and one at the caves. They were painting along, when suddealy the ladder gave way and they were thrown into the air. The man at 120n m the middle had gone down to the caves and the combined weight of the two tipped the ladder up and threw the man at the peak into the air as if he had been sitting on the business end of a catapult. "When the man at the peak went up he had a bucket of paint in his hand and he took it with him. The other two men dropped to the ground, but he went away over and fell against the wall of the next When he was going down the paint flew out of the bucket and some of it went on the side of the bouse near which he struck. The painters fell about thirty feet and were pretty badly hurt. The man who had the fall from the peak of the roof lay on the ground HASAN HENRY terribly injured. His back was broken and so were his legs. The men were all groaning, and quite a crowd gathered around. Somebody sent a call for an ambulance. Just then the woman who owned the house on which the paint was splashed came out. She ran over to the man who had his back broken and said: 'Are you much hurt, my poor man?"

"He's pretty severely injured, mum." said a bystander.

"Oh, I'm so sorry," she went on. "Is there anything I can do for the poor man?" Just then she turned and saw the splotches of red paint on the side of the house. "Why:" she screamed. look at what the loafer has done! He's splashed paint all over my house! I don't see how men can be so careless. He might have taken a little pains to keen that paint off. Anyway, I'll make his boss pay for it." And she flounced into the house and left the unfortunate painters groaning on the ground. - Buffalo Express.

name was Frederick Barrois.

He was of a good disposition; that could be read on his youthful face. Such a youthful face, that in seeing the narrow red ribbon on his buttonhole, people sometimes asked him for his story. And he, to avoid the embarrassment felt in speaking of oneself, answered somewhat maliciously:

"I was born twenty-six years ago, and since then-nothing ever happened to me."

But it was not so! It happened to him that he had bravely won this red ribbon, which showed so advantageously upon his breast. Having been sent to Tonquin as a cavalry officer he had freed a battery of artillery, which the enemies already believed in their pes-

Unfortunately it also happened to him during the fight that he had re-ceived a bullet in the side.

As he had been too recently appointed heutenant to be promoted to the rank of captain he received instead the cross of the Legion of Honor, and this greatly heiped to heal his wound. Still, however well healed it might have been, he remained very weak. He was sent home to become stronger.

And this is how, for the last fortnight, he had been living in clover at the home of his sister, Mme. Julia Duchemin, whose husband owned a glass-works at Boves, near Amiens.

Frederick was happy there, for he loved his sister and his sister loved him. There was but one drawback to his happiness; his brother-in-law, Jacques Duchemin, had been obliged to leave on the day following the young officer's arrival

As a compensation, there was beween the brother and the sister the latter's daughter, a girl just over five years of age, who appeared delighted with Uncle Fred and with the gold lace of his uniform, and for whose benefit Frederick became a boy again.

All the acquaintances they had-but with whom they sustained almost constant intercourse - were Mme. Bourgeois, a widow, and her daughter Antoinette, a young girl of eighteen.

How pretty she was!-not so much in regularity of feature, but in her simplicity, her natural grace, her personal

As for Mme. Bourgeois, she was kindness itself; but a jovial, indulgent, sensible, smiling kindness. Mother and daughter were a charming pair. . That is what our young man had ascertained at once, to his no small satisfaction. He found an attraction he had never before experienced in meet-ing these ladies. Were they late in coming? Time seemed heavy to him. And if his sister advised him to go for them, off he went at once. It was not far, it is true. Three hundred yards from the glass works. They lived in a large villa, surrounded by a The Boyd Medical Company, fine park, which with the farms, the woods and the ponds belonged to the young girl in her own right, without THE PASSION FOR NEATNESS. counting other property which it was rumored amounted to over a million. One morning, after breakfast, Frederick was smoking a cigar in the garden, by his sister's side, in whose skirts the little Martha was diligently curl> ing her doll's wig. At the table they had spoken of Antoinette, and now-now they still spoke of her. Then, after a moment of silence, Frederick said, with a sigh: "What a pity she is so rich!"

"Why?" asked Julia, looking steadily at her brother with eyes full of anxiety. Why? Forsooth! that was easily understood. Because without that the young man would have felt no scruples in avowing his love for Antoinette, and would have asked for her hand. "What does it matter?" said his sisclaimed: "Julia! Julia! I have but you in the world. You have some sorrow-oh! I beg of you, do not hide it from me! Sister, dear little sister! You have no right to conceal it from me."

She hesitated for a moment, then in a low voice, in accents choked with sobs, she whispered: "We may have to go into bankruptey." Impossible to stop now. She had to complete her confidence. It was simple and short. A bank suspended payment. Through is they would lose a large amount. That is why Duchemin was traveling. Alus! his letters announced nothing NCLE FRED was simply a very nice fellow whose low whose sults. And the affair gave models sults.

"Aud then Jacques is so kind, so dillgent, so honest! If you only knew, Fred, how he loves your sister and what happiness she owes him! Ah! Ruin, privations—that is nothing! The hard part is that a man like Jacques should bear the undeserved stain of a kind of disgrace. Will it ever be granted to me to console him?"

In his turn the young man kept quiet, lowering his eyes, thinking of this mar-ringe which might have saved his rela-

But-while lowering his eyes he saw his red ribbon, and it seemed to him be heard an interior voice repeating the sentence he had just uttered: "It would not be acting like a gentleman." He also saw that Martha no longer curied her doll's wig. Sitting on the ground, motionless and silent, the child was looking at her mother, who wept silently. She wept-in silence "Julia," said the young man, soberly, "go, in my name, and ask for Mile.

Bourgeois' hand." "At last!" triumphantly exclaimed Antoinette's mother, after Julia had formulated her request. Then, calling her daughter, she added in the sam joyous tone: "Come—he has come to it! Answer, darling. Tell—tell how backward we found him!"

A lovely smile, so chaste in its franke ness, lit up the young girl's face, and, without speaking, she advanced toward Mme. Duchemin with extended hands. Then, kissing her: "I am so happy!" she exclaimed.

The very next day Frederick began his "wooing," as it is called.

Yet, what a strange thing! He, so outspoken till then-so open and so gay -was formal now, circumspect, stilted; almost unpleasant. Good-bye to intimate "chatter," to all freedom! He chose his words carefully. No more jokes now! At first, Antoinette was disconcerted by it. But, surmounting her painful impression, she appeared happy enough for two. She was the first to speak of their plans, saying, as if inadvertently, "these dear plans." He still called her "mademoiselle," while she called him plain "Frederick." She consulted him about the details of their future home. What shade did he prefer for the curtains? And when they were passing the glass works, stooping to kiss Martha, she prompted: "Say: 'Good morning, Aunt Fred.'"

The attorneys had taken the matter in hand. Everything was ready, for the lieutenant had told his sister: "Act for me. Have the settlements drawn to suit yourself." As for him, to all questions he as swered: "Yes. All right. As you please. So much so, that at last Julia took him aside, and said to him: "Take care, Fred; take care lest you grieve this child!"

"Grieve her!" he repeated, startled. "It would cause me the most bitter remorse. "Yet one would think you do not love her with all the power of my soul, of my conscience, and of my probity. Devoid of feeling as I may appear, my heart is all her own. I admire and I dore her! Ah! why is:she not poor! You would see-you would see then Julia!" he added, relapsing into his darker mood.

The eventful day was fixed. The bans were to be published. After dinner, the lieutenant, accompanied the ladies home, walking by their side along the road. At the door, they bade one another good-by. After that word had been spoken. Autoinette remained at Frederick's side, very close to him. She appeared to await something. It seemed as if her forehead was bending toward her betrothed's

He understood. And, once more lowering his eyes, he saw the red ribbon lit by the last rays of the setting sun. And, as in an hallucination, in the rustling of the leaves he thought he heard again: "It would not be acting like a gentleman."

Then, dazzled, he stepped back and in a choking voice: "Listen! my heart bursting. Even if I unsettled everything, I must speak. I must tell What? Everything! He stated everything, indeed; the situation, his seruples, his great sorrow, Autoinette and her mother sought to interrupt him, repeating: "But-but-" He did not listen; he went on to the end. And then only were they able to finish their sentence:

P. & T. A. Wichts, Kan. Telephone 211, 114 North A.am steed. INDIAN SIGN LANGUAGE.

Lieut. H. L. Scott, U. S. A., recently carried on a long sign conversation. with several Sieux Indians before the folk-lore congress. He said of this language, as reported in the Chicago

"Indians of all tribes units in saying that the sign language is of vast antiquity; that it was handed down to them as were their spoken languages. Those who do the most traveling and meet the greatest number of people of a different tongue have the greatest necessity for its use. The Comanches are less versed in its use than; any other tribe, because Comanche is the court language of, the southern plains and all seed of any other means of communication was consequently but little felt. While many of the eigns are immediately suggestive of the object they are intended to represent, others are greatly abbreviated and conventionalized beyond recognition. Most of themare made with graceful and flowing gestures, for the Indian, never being crowded for time, prefers grace of mo-

There fee postures or facial expressions in the sign language, most of the thought being expressed by the hands. It is a living lunguage, for new signs are constantly brought into to describe new objects and capo his of entire supplanting the motion Janguage.
